

Diaper Bags: For Dads Only

If you're like most daddies-to-be, the thought of toting teddy-bear decorated diaper bags makes you cringe. Fear not! Whatever style you call your own, there's a bag for you.

The Professional Packer:

The Daddy Gear diaper bag by In Touch is a compact black bag that can be slung across one shoulder or around your waist. It's got everything the busy dad needs — a changing pad, insulated bottle compartment, waterproof dirty-diaper pocket, and zippered pockets for valuables or your cell phone. The best part: it meets the size limitations for bags at sports stadiums nationwide. $24.99 at www.carseatcompanion.com

The Outdoorsman:

The MacSac by Maclaren equals a savvy camper's backpack. Its smart design coordinates with their innovative stroller line, and the ergonomic handle makes long hauls less of a pain. The expandable main section is roomy, with an insulated, double bottle bag and enough pockets for any dad. The bottom zips off and holds a PVC zip bag for wet items and a detachable changing mat. The rucksack design lets dad concentrate on the great outdoors, and reflective piping adds safety. $60.00 at retailers nationwide.

Prepared for Everything:

The Metro Backback by Combi features air mesh ventilated shoulder straps, just in case your day trip goes a few hours longer than planned. The bag is expandable just about everywhere, meaning you can use either the compact, slim model or the packed-to-the-gills model when you have to pack for anything. The comfort grip handle makes the bag easy to carry in any position, just as you'd expect from a bag designed by parents, for parents. $49.99 at retailers nationwide — JH
